University of Nebraska - Extension

Many professors at UNL plan student class projects that need organizations to partner with them to give students real-world experience while simultaneously providing service to Nebraska communities. NE Extension has organized a Virtual Open House with some of these professors so communities and organizations can meet with professors and learn more about potential partnerships.

The event is being held at two different times, so you can choose which one fits your schedule:

September 17, 1:30 CST/12:30 MST

September 19, 9:00 CST/8:00 MST

You can learn more about it here: <https://myextension.unl.edu/community-unl-opportunity-virtual-open-house>

And register on the website or here: https://unleducation.az1.qualtrics.com/jfe/form/SV_7TlqrlpquGnrXeK

The Zoom link will be sent to you after you register.

The following UNL divisions are presenting opportunities:

School of Computing

Overview: The University of Nebraska School of Computing's Senior Design runs a capstone program for junior and senior students majoring in Computer Science, Computer Engineering, and Software Engineering. This program provides students with real-life experience and prepares them for an industry career. We are looking for 20+ industry organizations or UNL departments to sponsor a computing-design project for our students. As a project sponsor, you will receive around 1,500 student hours of development time over two semesters, plus 100% ownership of the Intellectual Property following the project's end. The students work in teams of 5-6 during the two semesters beginning in August and finishing in May of the following year. This program is an excellent way for your company to interact with UNL, create lasting relationships, and give back to the community by supporting the next generation of innovative talent. The cost is approximately $20,000 for industry partners.

College of Architecture (Thursday only)

Overview: The Community and Regional Planning program engages student teams in community service projects aligned with the university's land grant missions. These projects encompass various areas, including land use planning, economic and housing planning, as well as environmental and hazard mitigation planning. Through these initiatives, tangible benefits can be directly delivered to communities across Nebraska, bolstering community economic development, downtown revitalization, hazard mitigation efforts, and environmental sustainability. Recent projects have had a positive impact on various locales, including David City, Beatrice, Syracuse, Peru, Winslow, and others.

Department of Marketing

The Marketing Capstone class works with businesses, start-ups, and nonprofit clients to develop Marketing Plans for these clients. The students work as teams of 5 to 6 students with the client throughout a 15-week spring semester or a 5-week summer session to develop a marketing plan that can address real short-term or long-term needs or opportunities for each client. In some cases, we have done some marketing for the client, including developing actual material for a campaign, sponsoring an event, or even developing a business plan. Typically, we will work with 10-12 clients a semester. We are looking for 10-12 businesses (including start-ups) or non-profit organizations that want to develop a marketing strategy, including a marketing plan. We ask that the organization make a presentation to each of the classes (usually there are two classes), be willing to spend 4 to 5 hours throughout the semester working with the students, and attend a final presentation in early May if possible. Each client will have at least one team assigned to them. The team is composed of 5 or 6 senior Marketing majors. The students will work with your organization and do outside research to develop an actual marketing plan, including action recommendations, a budget, and a marketing calendar. The students will present to you and your team and give you an opportunity to ask questions. They will also provide a written marketing plan with action items and recommendations.

This is an opportunity to look at some aspect of your marketing with fresh eyes. You will get to work with UNL students and sometimes see potential employees in action. Several students were hired by organizations they have worked with in the class. There is no dollar cost to the client. We ask for a time commitment from the client of 4 to 6 hours over the semester.

College of Journalism and Mass Communications

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln College of Journalism and Mass Communication's runs JACHT, a competitive student-run advertising and public relations agency open to all majors. This program provides upper-level students with professional development opportunities to work with real-life clients on integrated media communications campaigns.

College of Journalism and Mass Communications

Buoy is a student-run agency within the Experience Lab that serves non-profits and other purpose-driven organizations. With guidance from a faculty liaison and professionals-in-residence, students build core skills in advertising and public relations while exploring professional interests. (Note: Buoy is a learning lab for students largely in their first or second year of studies at UNL. Buoy students are far less experienced than the students selected through a competitive process to work for Jacht.).

College of Law Immigration Clinic

The Immigration Clinic at UNL's College of Law is developing a partnership with the Schuyler Public Schools for the purpose of helping its students navigate the U.S. immigration system by providing legal representation and educational training to students, the school at large, and the local legal community. They are looking for forums in Schuyler in which they might present general information about immigration issues.

There is a public health crisis unfolding before us that most adults have no idea is happening. Children are seeing extremely violent pornography online in unprecedented numbers. By the age of 12, 1 in 3 kids have already seen hardcore pornography.

Violent pornography is the #1 sex educator of children and it's creating increasing reports of child-on-child sexual assault, vulnerabilities around extortion, exploitation, a rise in strangulation, and a generation of kids who think sexual violence is normal.

Research bears out the correlational and causational relationship between porn use and sexual violence, especially as a child's brain is particularly susceptible to explicit content.

This presentation is eye-opening and will infuse you with hope about how we can mitigate the harm being done to our kids online.
